

CHAPTER 02

HISTORY OF PAKISTAN

MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTIONS

1. The Chairman of the Boundary Line Commission was _____.
2. The Indus Basin Treaty was signed in _____.
3. The Quit India Movement started in _____.
4. The First World War broke out in _____.
5. The Second World War broke out in _____.
6. Quaid-e-Azam inaugurated the State Bank of Pakistan in _____.
7. The first Governor General of India was _____.
8. M.A.O. College was founded in the year _____.
9. Lord Mountbatten appointed _____ boundary commissions.
10. The Cripps Mission came to India in _____.
11. The 3rd June Plan was announced by Mountbatten in _____.

SHORT ANSWERS

What do you know about Pakistan Movement:

The Pakistan Movement was a historic political and ideological struggle led by the Muslims of the Indian subcontinent to establish a separate homeland where they could freely live according to the teachings of Islam. This movement gained strength in the early 20th century, driven by the fear that Muslims, as a minority in a Hindu-majority India, would lose their religious, cultural, and political identity. The decline of the Mughal Empire and the rise of British colonial rule had marginalized Muslims both economically and politically, creating a need for a platform that could represent their interests. This platform was formed with the creation of the All-India Muslim League in 1906 at Dhaka, which became the leading political party for Indian Muslims.

The ideological foundation of the Pakistan Movement was laid by the Two-Nation Theory, initially promoted by Sir Syed Ahmad Khan and later emphasized by Allama Iqbal and Muhammad Ali Jinnah. This theory stated that Hindus and Muslims were not just different religious groups but distinct nations with separate cultures, values, languages, and traditions. Therefore, Muslims needed a separate homeland where they could govern themselves and preserve their way of life.

Several key events shaped the Pakistan Movement. The Lucknow Pact of 1916 marked a temporary alliance between the Congress and Muslim League, where Congress accepted the Muslim demand for separate electorates, acknowledging their separate political identity. The Khilafat Movement (1919–1924), although unsuccessful, played a major role in raising political awareness among Indian Muslims. In 1929, Jinnah presented his Fourteen Points, demanding political safeguards and autonomy for Muslims, and in 1930, Allama Iqbal's Allahabad Address envisioned the establishment of an independent Muslim state in northwestern India.

The most significant turning point came with the Lahore Resolution on 23rd March 1940, passed by the Muslim League, which officially demanded separate states for Muslims in the eastern and northwestern zones of India. This resolution laid the foundation for the demand for Pakistan. The idea gained massive public support, and in the 1945–46 elections, the Muslim League won almost all Muslim seats, proving that the majority of Indian Muslims supported the creation of Pakistan.

Under the dynamic leadership of Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah, who emphasized that "Muslims are a nation according to any definition of a nation," the Pakistan Movement reached its final stage. Faced with increasing communal tensions and failed negotiations between Congress and the Muslim League, the British government finally agreed to partition

India. As a result, on 14th August 1947, Pakistan emerged as an independent Muslim state. In conclusion, the Pakistan Movement was not only a political campaign but also a powerful expression of Muslim identity and the right to self-determination. It was fueled by ideological conviction, political foresight, and mass support, leading to the creation of a nation where Muslims could freely practice their religion and develop their society in accordance with Islamic values. The movement continues to serve as a source of inspiration for unity, sacrifice, and the importance of preserving one's identity.

Write brief note on Pakistan Resolution?

The Pakistan Resolution, also known as the Lahore Resolution, was passed on 23rd March 1940 during the annual session of the All-India Muslim League held at Minto Park, Lahore (now Iqbal Park). It was a landmark moment in the struggle for a separate homeland for the Muslims of the Indian subcontinent.

The resolution was presented by Maulvi A.K. Fazlul Haq and strongly supported by Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah. It declared that Muslims were a separate nation with their own religion, culture, and civilization, and therefore, they had the right to a separate state. The resolution demanded that the Muslim-majority areas in the northwestern and eastern zones of India should be grouped to form independent states where Muslims could freely practice their religion.

This resolution gave a clear direction to the Pakistan Movement and laid the foundation for the creation of Pakistan in 1947. It marked the beginning of the formal demand for a separate Muslim state and is celebrated annually as Pakistan Day on 23rd March.

Write a short note on 3rd June Plan.

The 3rd June Plan, also known as the Mountbatten Plan, was announced on 3rd June 1947 by the last British Viceroy of India, Lord Mountbatten. It outlined the final decision for the partition of British India into two independent dominions — India and Pakistan.

This plan came after years of political struggle and communal tensions, and it was based on the failure of previous attempts to keep India united. The plan accepted the Muslim League's demand for a separate homeland, as it was clear that Hindus and Muslims could not coexist in a single state peacefully.

Key Points of the 3rd June Plan:

- India would be divided into two independent countries: India and Pakistan.
- Provinces like Punjab and Bengal would be partitioned based on religious majorities.
- Sindh, NWFP (now Khyber Pakhtunkhwa), and Baluchistan were given the choice to join Pakistan.
- Princely States were given the option to join either country or remain independent.
- The British would transfer power by 15th August 1947.

The 3rd June Plan was crucial because it officially recognized the creation of Pakistan and paved the way for the independence of both India and Pakistan. It marked the success of the Pakistan Movement and fulfilled the aspirations of millions of Muslims who wanted a separate homeland.

The Shimla Conference of 1945 holds great significance in the history of the Pakistan Movement. It was convened by the British Viceroy, Lord Wavell, in Shimla, with the aim of resolving political deadlock between the Indian National Congress and the All-India Muslim League. The conference was based on the Wavell Plan, which proposed reconstituting the Viceroy's Executive Council to give greater representation to Indians and prepare the ground for self-government.

Objectives of the Conference:

- To bring Indian leaders together on a common platform to decide on India's constitutional future.
- To form an interim government with equal Muslim and Hindu representation.
- To recognize Indian political parties in governance before full independence.

Role of the Muslim League:

The Muslim League, under the leadership of Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah, participated in the conference and demanded to be recognized as the sole representative of Indian Muslims. The League strongly opposed the Congress's claim of representing all Indians, including Muslims.

Reasons for Failure:

- The Congress refused to accept the Muslim League as the exclusive representative of Muslims.
- The Muslim League rejected any formula that denied their status as a separate nation.
- This led to a complete breakdown of the negotiations.

Importance in Pakistan Movement:

- The failure of the Shimla Conference confirmed the deep divide between Hindus and Muslims.
- It strengthened the demand for a separate Muslim homeland, as peaceful coexistence in a united India seemed impossible.
- It also increased the popularity and political strength of the Muslim League among Indian Muslims.

In conclusion, the Shimla Conference was a turning point in the political struggle of Indian Muslims. It made it clear that Muslim rights could not be safeguarded under a united India, and therefore, the creation of Pakistan became even more crucial.

What do you know about Indian Independence Act 1947Indian Independence Act July 1947*Introduction:

To give legal shape to the June 3 Plan, the Indian Independence Act was promulgated (July 1947). In other words to give legal shape to the June 3rd plan this law which is called as the Indian independence Act was promulgated. The British were winding up their rule in India through constitutional and legal means and that was done through this Act as I earlier said passed by the British parliament and it was passed by the British parliament.

What were the provisions of this Act?Two independent dominion states:

The first and the most significant provision of this Act was that two independent dominion states would be established in India on August 15, 1947. Here two things are important for our understanding, first the date for independence for Pakistan and India was given 15th August 1947, if we go back to Feb., announcement we find that Lord Attlee said that there would be self govt in India by June 1948, In other words the date was advanced.

The dominion status:

The 2nd point here is the dominion state or the dominion status, this means practically an independent state, the only difference is the dominion which is the British common wealth system, the state owe their allegiance to the British Crown although the British Crown cannot interfere in day to day affairs of the states, therefore the grant of the status of the dominion state both to India and Pakistan meant that they will be fully independent and sovereign states.

Legislatures:

3rd important provision of this act was that their legislatures will have all powers to make laws for the respective states that is Indian legislature for India Pakistani legislature for Pakistan.

The government of India act 1935:

The 4th important provision of this act was that the Government of India Act, 1935, to be interim constitution of these states, subject to changes due to Indian Independence Act 1947.

The Governor General:

Another provision was that the Governor Generals can amend the Interim Constitution until March 31, 1948. to deal with difficult and emergency situations.

Princely status:

It said that All arrangements between the British and the Princely states to come to an end and they are free to have new arrangements with the new states or the successor states which are India and Pakistan.

The king of India:

The provision of this Act was that the British King will no longer use the title of the King of India.

The interim constitution:

Now if we look at the provisions of this Act on the bases of which India and Pakistan came into existence as independent and sovereign states, I may refer back to the reference of the govt of India Act 1935. Indian independence Act declared that the govt of India Act 1935 will be the interim constitution of both the countries India and Pakistan. This Act of 1935 was passed by the British parliament in 1935 and in 1937 its provincial part was introduced and its federal part was never introduced in India. An important provision of this act was that no legislature central or the provincial could amend this law but only the British parliament can amend this act of 1935. Once this Act was passed its position changed all together. From 15, August 1947 the Indian and Pakistani legislature were given the rights to amend this constitution as they wished.

The first Interim constitution of Pakistan:

It also provided that the GG can also bring some changes in the Govt of India Act in order to deal with the situation as it existed at that time. In other words the 1st interim constitution of Pakistan was the govt of India Act 1935 as adopted in Pakistan in the light of the Indian independence Act 1947 and this is also described as the interim constitution of Pakistan because from 15th August this constitution became operative and the same was the case with India. In both these countries this constitution began to function until they had their own constitution. Now we move on to the last section of our lecture today or how the June 3rd plan as Indian Independence Act of 1947 were actually implemented and that is the partition process how Indian independence Act became a reality and two independent states came into existence.

The Partition Process

Punjab

In the case of Punjab, The Punjab Legislative Assembly held its session in Lahore and its members and the members from Muslim and Non-Muslim members met separately. The Muslim members favoured joining new CA which means they opted for Pakistan. The non-Muslims voted for partition of Punjab and joining India and Punjab was partitioned.

Bengal

Same procedure applied to the Bengal Assembly the Muslim members favoured joining new CA while non-Muslims favoured partitioning and joining India. In other words the Bengal Assembly opted for Pakistan.

Sindh

In case of Sindh the Sindh Assembly voted to join Pakistan. In this way Sindh became part of Pakistan.

NWFP

Here the Indian Independence Act provided for a referendum and the registered voters wanted to join Pakistan or India. A very clear majority voted to join Pakistan. Although the govt in the province was not in favour of joining Pakistan. Referendum decided in favour of Pakistan while Dr. Khan's govt. boycotted it after it became clear that it would lose. And the Khudai Khidmargar wanted a 3rd option to be given but there was no provision for that therefore Referendum brought NWFP into Pakistan.

Baluchistan

Baluchistan was not a full province at that time so the procedures adopted for the other provinces could not be adopted for Baluchistan. Whatever democratic system existed was used there, the elected members of Quetta Municipal Committee were asked to vote and they voted overwhelmingly for Pakistan. In addition to this Shahi Jirga was held where tribal chiefs participated and they also opted to join Pakistan and so far as the states were concerned they for Pakistan later on.

Sylhet

For Sylhet district a Referendum was held to join East Bengal and East Bengal had already opted to join Pakistan.

If you look at the procedure which I have explained to you it becomes very clear that differences that opted through a democratic process for Pakistan. The democratic system as it was existed at that time. The voters that were registered at that time, they participated in Referendum and in case of Baluchistan whatever participatory system was there was used. So, in other words Pakistan comes into existence through a democratic process and the democratic institutions which existed at that time were brought into and only then Pakistan came into existence and it was commendable and it was the result of a political struggle and an exercise of the democratic rights of the people of the area that constituted Pakistan.

Governor General's Issue:

Mountbatten wanted to be joint GG (Governor General) of India and Pakistan while ML decided to appoint Jinnah as the first Governor General of Pakistan in July.

Boundaries determined on August 17:

Boundaries Commission award declared many controversial decisions about certain areas like Gurdaspur, Zira Tehsil etc, but the ML accepted it with protest.

The Radcliffe Award

Background:

According to the provision of the 3rd June Plan, two Boundary commissions viz. The Punjab Boundary Commission and the Bengal Boundary Commission were constituted. These commissions were placed under the chairmanship of Sir Cyril Radcliffe, an English Lawyer. Members of the Boundary Commissions were as under:

Members Of The Punjab Boundary Commission:Chairman: Sir Cyril Radcliffe

- i) Mr. Justice Din Mohammad (Pakistan)
- ii) Mr. Justice Mohammad Munir (Pakistan)
- iii) Mr. Justice Mehar Chand Mahajan (India)
- iv) Mr. Justice Tej Singh (India)

Members Of The Bengal Boundary Commission:Chairman: Sir Cyril Radcliffe

- i) Mr. Justice S.A Rehman (Pakistan)
- ii) Mr. Justice Abu Saleh Mohammad Akram (Pakistan)
- iii) Mr. Justice C.C. Biswas (India)
- iv) Mr. Justice B.K Mukherjee (India)

Radcliffe Award:

Chairman of the Boundary Commission Sir Cyril Radcliffe arrived in India on 8th July, 1947 and instructed both the Commissions to demarcate the boundaries of their respective provinces on the basis of the contiguity of the Muslim and non-Muslim areas according to the 1941 census. The commissions started their work and the councils on behalf of the Muslim League, Congress, Sikhs and other parties presented their arguments. The chairman Radcliffe did not participate in public sittings but studied the records of the proceedings. Finally, as it was feared both the commissions failed to evolve agreed award due to a host of conflicting interests. As a result, Radcliffe gave his own awards in Punjab and Bengal.

Unjust Award In Punjab:

Cyril Radcliffe, the chairman of the Boundary Commission, as feared by Jinnah, could not maintain partiality and in order to please Mountbatten and Congress gave its prejudiced award. In Punjab, the Radcliffe Award snatched a number of Muslim majority areas from Pakistan. These included Gurdaspur, Pathankot and Batala Tehsil (Gurdaspur district), Anjala Tehsil (Amritsar), Jullundur Tehsil (Jullundur district) and Zira and Ferozepur tehsils (Ferozepur district). Out of these, Pathankot tehsil was given to India in order to provide a link between Kashmir and India.

Unjust Award In Bengal:

Similarly, in Bengal province the most important question was related with the future of Calcutta. It was the capital of province. Although, the Muslims made a quarter of the population of Calcutta, large section of its population consisted of scheduled castes that were allied with the Muslim League. In any case, for more than two hundred years Muslims of Bengal had contributed to make Calcutta what it was in 1947 and centre of commerce and industry. The city of Calcutta was the biggest educational, industrial and commercial centre. The development of Calcutta was based on the toil of Muslim peasantry of Bengal. East Bengal produced most of the raw material which had to be sent to Calcutta because all the factories and mills were in Calcutta.

The Congress leaders were determined to get Calcutta by foul and fair means. Eventually, Calcutta was awarded to India, ignoring the claims of the Muslims.

Reaction To The Radcliffe Award:

The biased Radcliffe award pleased the Hindus because it deprived Pakistan of many Muslim majority areas. On the other hand the Muslims of Punjab and Bengal were shocked to see the award which totally went in favour of India. Jinnah too was greatly disappointed but he accepted the plan with sportsman spirit. During the course of his broadcast speech, he said:

“The division of India now finally and irrevocably effected. No doubt we feel that the carving out of this great independent Muslim State has suffered injustices. We have been squeezed in as much as it was possible and the latest blow we have received was the award of the Boundary Commission. It was an unjust, incomprehensible and perverse award, but we have agreed to abide by it, it may be our misfortune but we must bear up this one more blow with fortitude, courage and hope.”

Aims and Objective of All India Muslim League:

The All India Muslim League was established in 1906 with the aim of representing the political interests of Muslims in India. Its creation was a significant step in the political mobilization of Muslims and contributed to the development of the Pakistan Movement. The main objectives and aims of the All-India Muslim League included:

1. Protection of Muslim Rights:

The primary aim of the All India Muslim League was to protect and promote the political, social, and cultural rights of Muslims in India. The League sought to ensure that the Muslim community could live with dignity and have a voice in the political sphere, especially given their minority status in a predominantly Hindu-majority India.

2. Political Representation:

The Muslim League aimed to secure adequate political representation for Muslims in the legislative bodies of British India. This was particularly important in the context of the British colonial system, which often overlooked Muslim interests in favor of the Hindu majority.

3. Separate Electorates:

One of the key demands of the League was the separate electorate for Muslims, which would ensure that they could elect their own representatives to legislative assemblies. This demand was later fulfilled in the Lucknow Pact (1916), which formalized the concept of separate electorates for Muslims.

4. Preservation of Muslim Culture and Religion:

The League aimed to safeguard the religious and cultural identity of Muslims in India. The leadership of the League feared that the cultural and religious traditions of Muslims would be overshadowed by the Hindu majority, and thus sought to protect these aspects through political means.

5. Support for Muslim Unity:

The League worked to foster unity among Muslims across India, promoting a sense of solidarity and collective action to address common concerns. The idea was to present a united front in the face of political challenges and negotiations with the British and the Indian National Congress.

6. Opposition to Congress's Policies:

Initially, the Muslim League was also focused on opposing the Indian National Congress's policies, which, the League felt, did not adequately represent the interests of Muslims. The League wanted to ensure that Muslims were not marginalized in any national political movement.

7. Autonomy and Self-Government:

The All India Muslim League also advocated for self-rule for India under the British Empire, with an emphasis on the need for political autonomy for Muslims in any future constitutional arrangement. This would later evolve into the demand for a separate nation for Muslims, culminating in the creation of Pakistan.

8. Foundation for the Creation of Pakistan:

Over time, the Muslim League's aim expanded to include the creation of a separate Muslim majority state. This objective came into sharper focus under the leadership of Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah, who, in 1940, articulated the demand for a separate Muslim homeland, leading to the Pakistan Resolution.

In summary, the All India Muslim League was created to serve as a political platform for Muslims in India, focusing on the protection of their religious, cultural, and political rights. Over time, its aims shifted from securing Muslim representation to demanding the creation of Pakistan as a separate Muslim-majority nation.

What do you know about Indus Basic Treaty?

The Indus Basin Treaty is a significant agreement between India and Pakistan concerning the distribution and management of the waters of the Indus River and its tributaries. The treaty was signed on September 19, 1960, under the mediation of the World Bank and aimed to resolve the disputes between the two countries over the sharing of the water resources of the Indus Basin.

Background:

The Indus River system consists of six major rivers: the Indus, Jhelum, Chenab, Ravi, Beas, and Sutlej. These rivers originate from the Himalayas and flow through both India and Pakistan, with the majority of their flow passing through Pakistan. The sharing of these waters became a contentious issue after the partition of British India in 1947, as both countries sought control over these vital resources.

In the early years after independence, Pakistan and India had no formal agreement on how to share the water. Tensions escalated, particularly after India constructed a series of dams and barrages on rivers flowing into Pakistan. The situation became more critical due to Pakistan's heavy reliance on the waters of the Indus and its tributaries for irrigation and agriculture.

Key Features of the Indus Basin Treaty:

1. Water Distribution: The treaty allocated the waters of the six rivers between India and Pakistan, dividing them into two groups:

- Pakistan's share: The Indus, Jhelum, and Chenab rivers (often called the Western Rivers) were allocated to Pakistan, which could use them for irrigation and other purposes.
- India's share: The Ravi, Beas, and Sutlej rivers (referred to as the Eastern Rivers) were allocated to India. These rivers pass through Indian territory before reaching Pakistan.

2. India's Restrictions on the Western Rivers: India was granted limited rights to use the waters of the Western Rivers (Indus, Jhelum, and Chenab) for non-consumptive purposes like hydroelectric power generation, but India was not allowed to divert or consume water for irrigation on a large scale from these rivers. It could, however, construct projects with the permission of Pakistan.

3. Construction of Dams and Projects: The treaty laid down guidelines for the construction of dams and other projects on the rivers. It specified that India would have to seek Pakistan's approval for building projects that could affect the flow of water to Pakistan, particularly on the Western Rivers. For example, India's Baglihar Dam project on the Chenab River became a point of contention later, but it was resolved through the dispute resolution mechanism of the treaty.

4. Dispute Resolution Mechanism: A key feature of the treaty was the establishment of a permanent Indus Commission for India and Pakistan. This commission is tasked with facilitating cooperation on water-related issues, resolving disputes, and ensuring that both countries adhere to the treaty's provisions. In case of a dispute, the treaty allowed for arbitration by a neutral third party, including the World Bank.

5. Financial Assistance for Infrastructure: The World Bank provided financial assistance for the construction of infrastructure to help Pakistan adjust to the treaty's terms. Pakistan received funding to build the replacement projects for the Eastern Rivers, including canals and reservoirs, to compensate for the loss of water from the Ravi, Beas, and Sutlej rivers.

Importance of the Indus Basin Treaty:

1. Peace and Cooperation: The treaty has been hailed as one of the most successful examples of international cooperation over a shared natural resource. Despite several wars and ongoing tensions between India and Pakistan, the treaty has remained largely intact, and both countries have continued to honor its terms.

2. Water Security for Pakistan: The Indus Basin Treaty was critical for Pakistan's agricultural economy, as the country depends on the waters of the Indus and its tributaries for irrigation. The treaty ensured that Pakistan would continue to have access to the waters of the Western Rivers, which are vital for its agricultural sector.

3. Management of Water Resources: The treaty established a framework for the joint management of the Indus River system, facilitating better coordination between the two countries regarding the use and preservation of these crucial water resources.

4. Preventing Conflict: By establishing a clear mechanism for dispute resolution and cooperation, the Indus Basin Treaty helped avert potential conflicts between India and Pakistan over water resources. This is particularly significant given the strategic importance of water in both countries, where it is a critical resource for agriculture, drinking water, and industrial uses.